James,

Apologies for the delay. Here is the French version (en français dans l'original).

The Government of Canada is dedicating approximately $6-billion to buying personal protective equipment, medical equipment and supplies to keep Canadians safe. This includes $4.5-billion as part of the Safe Restait Agreement.

We have pursued an aggressive procurement strategy and are diversifying our supply chains in order to meet immediate demands for PPE as well as to prepare for future needs, including a potential second wave. This strategy is delivering results for Canadians in terms of securing much needed supplies and also engaging Canadian industry.

To date, Canada has signed contracts totaling approximately $6-billion on behalf of: the Public Health Agency of Canada to provide PPE to provinces and territories; federal departments and agencies; and the Essential Services Contingency Reserve. More than 80 per cent of the total value of these agreements are with Canadian companies that supply or distribute PPE. Contracts totaling nearly $2.5-billion are with Canadian manufacturers, many of which were identified through call-outs issued by Public Services and Procurement Canada (PSPC) and Innovation Science and Economic Development Canada.

We will continue to procure PPE and other supplies in order to keep Canadians safe through this pandemic. As the economy gradually re-opens, demand for PPE will continue to go up — and we are keeping up.

Thank you and have a nice evening,

Stefanie

Will translation be ready this evening? I'm hoping to do a bit more of a push tomorrow morning.

Thanks,

James

Thanks again to everyone on this.
I know how difficult it has been and we all would have appreciated more time with the product, but we should be very proud of what we put out.
It's a really great page that tells a great story for us.
In light of it being the week-end and all... I worked with the Min to draft a statement that we can share with any journalist who asks. This is attributable to the Minister:
