Boyan/Caitlin, are you good with this?

- In order to reopen the economy, we need to know that Canadians are safe.
- While our foremost focus is on the needs of frontline workers and Canada's health professionals, we are also actively exploring how the federal government could help organizations that provide essential services access the PPE their workers need.
- The COVID-19 Supply Council is another tool to ensure that Canada is well equipped with the PPE and medical supplies that we need today and moving forward.
- We are bringing together a group of leaders from the private and non-profit sectors who will provide advice on further establishing diversified and adaptable supply chains for key items like masks, gloves and disinfectants as this situation continues to evolve.
- This council builds on our collaborative approach to help us address current and future supply needs.
- In leveraging their experience and networks, they will provide valuable input on how to best streamline and strengthen our government's work in building essential sources of supply, and ensure that Canadians have access to what they need to stay safe and healthy as we move forward.

- Our government is working every step of the way with provinces and territories, workers and businesses, to ensure we are taking the actions necessary to address the impacts of COVID-19, and ensure Canadians are well protected.

Q:

My question is for the Minister of Health.

First of all, I would like to thank and congratulate the Minister of Health and the other members of the government who are working hard night and day to respond to this pandemic, both from a health and economic perspective, for their excellent work under the leadership of our Prime Minister.

Many of my constituents who work in the private sector, especially those in the retail and manufacturing industries, are wondering how they will manage in a reopening economy to get the personal protective equipment that they will need to work safely. For these companies, the challenge is significant, especially considering that there is no centralized distribution network as there is in the health care system.

I recognize that the government has just announced the creation of a council that will look into the issue of procurement.

Can the Minister explain the role of this council? Could she tell us what we plan to do to support Canadian companies in reopening the economy?

~~Given the obvious concerns about the supply of personal protective equipment, can the Minister of Health comment on whether a direct role for the federal government in the supply chain for this crucial equipment is being considered, given that the demand for this equipment, including from the private sector, is and will continue to be enormous, especially since, unlike the health care system, the private sector does not have a centralized distribution network?~~

Response could be our supply council lines + reopening lines, including active conversations about how best the feds can support PTs.

Subject: Friendly Q on supply council

Hello,

MP Scarpalleggia planning on asking this friendly tomorrow. I think the wording may go a bit too far, thoughts? Will send around a draft answer for review.

My question is for the Minister of Health.

First of all, I would like to thank and congratulate the Minister of Health and the other members of the government who are working hard night and day to respond to this pandemic, both from a health and economic perspective, for their excellent work under the leadership of our Prime Minister.

Many of my constituents who work in the private sector, especially those in the retail and manufacturing industries, are wondering how they will manage in a reopening economy to get the personal protective equipment that they will need to work safely.

I recognize that the government has just announced the creation of a council that will look into the issue of procurement.

Given the obvious concerns about the supply of personal protective equipment, can the Minister of Health comment on whether a direct role for the federal government in the supply chain for this crucial equipment is being considered, given that the demand for this equipment, including from the private sector, is and will continue to be enormous, especially since, unlike the health care system, the private sector does not have a centralized distribution network?

Is any consideration being given to supplying the private sector directly from the federal government, at least in part?
